SMUGGLERS WILL BE ARRESTED TODAY

driftwood as well, and he has "utilized the driftwood to his own private use." He is managing the Kentwell Waikiki property during the absence of his wife and, in the course of changes made on the property, he has used the lumber from the wrecked ship considerably, incidentally building a breakwater with a mast.

There is no fine or imprisonment mentioned as a penalty and the warrants are little more than injunctions. But this is not the limit of the complications.

Collector of Customs Stackable has customs officers stationed along the beach at the present time to collect a duty of forty-five cents a ton on every ton of coal that is brought to shore. This is a new wrinkle in the proceedings, as Stackable reached this decision after much thought, during which time about twenty tons were collected along the beach. The piles will probably be seized as smuggled goods, according to the trend of thought adopted by government officials.

In this second matter United States Marshal Eugene R. Hendry seems to figure extensively. As he lives at the Mochizuki Club at Waikiki, he was the nearest federal officer to the scene of the wreck, and those who were contemplating wading to him on the Helga's scattered cargo went to him and asked for legal instruction.

Hendry was flattered to be able to act the role of Brockton for once at least, and is reported to have said that they could go ahead and get all they wanted. They went, and now they're smugglers.

Mmanuel Silva, on the strength of the information dispensed by Hendry, built several big flat boats and has been working day and night hauling the coal to shore, having by far the largest pile of coal on shore.

Almost the entire cargo has in some inexplicable manner moved many yards from the place where the ship struck and went to pieces. It lies in a long pile, which is several feet above water at low tide.

Capt. Frederick Miller of the Miller Salvage Company has been working hard also, and yesterday the steamer Maake and the schooner Concord were anchored off the reef, with small boats plying between them and the coal pile at low tide. The Maake went into to the harbor last night laden to capacity.

Miller is operating under contract with the underwriters, who have taken steps to save as much of the cargo as they possibly can. Miller might possibly set forth the claim that no duty should be paid on the coal which he takes into port, on the ground that he is taking it from one American port to another, to wit, Waikiki Bay to Honolulu Harbor. In the general mixup of belated legal interpretations and confusion it might go through.

HENS ON VACATION.

Kohala hens are taking their annual vacation. Even the "Eggsy man" shies to the off side of the street. Any one fortunate enough to hear of an egg for sale sends an automobile and a bodyguard after it before the neighbors hear of it. Some of the housewives keep their ears glued to the telephone, hoping to hear a hen cackle at the Maunaloa, or somewhere. Ministers' hens are more conspicuous than the ordinary fowls. If only the lays of the Midget poets were audible, the writers would soon be in business. We have it—we will offer an egg to each new subscriber, right up to the limit of our press.—Kohala Midget.
